Worn down, at length, in body and mind, with these accumulated evils, and not meeting with even an alleviation of his distress, from the many nervous and other medicines which he had tried, he went to Bath, where he was greatly relieved by an ingenious Physician. He often after that, had recourse to those salutary waters; but from the first time he used them, he had short fits of the Gout every year, sometimes in the feet, sometimes in the hands; and as those fits were more or less complete, he was more or less relieved by them, and continued well a longer or shorter time after them. In the spring 1766, he had a fit of the Gout, which going off too soon, left him as bad with the lowness of spirits, pains in the head, giddiness, and c. as he had ever been. Upon this, he was advised to go to Buxton, in hopes the waters there would give him a more complete fit; which he accordingly did; but after drinking them a few days, he was seized with so violent an attack of the Gout in his stomach and bowels, that, for ten hours, it was not expected he could survive it. And when this attack went off, he had an extreme soreness over his whole body, as if,...
