Not illustrated. 1879 Excerpt: . . . at it sitting on the floor, then she went a little closer, when the bird hit her a slap right across the face with its wing. That finished the encounter, for the kitten retired under the sofa, from which retreat she could not be coaxed. Yesterday I saw an albatross. They are very handsome birds, with the same graceful flight as the pigeons, only slower, and much larger than I had thought, some measuring twelve or fourteen feet across the wings.
