Sir: I have the honor to submit herewith the results of experiments by Mr. J. August Fries, M. S., assistant expert in animal nutrition, upon Methods and Standards in Bomb Calorimetry. The accurate determination of the heats of combustion of organic substances is not only a fundamental requirement in the nutrition investigations now being conducted in cooperation with the institute of animal nutrition of the Pennsylvania State College, but is of great importance in many other lines of both scientific and technological research. Mr. Fries s investigations are a continuation of those reported in Bulletin 94 of the Bureau of Animal Industry and deal essentially with the standardization of methods as a means of securing results which shall be comparable among themselves and bear a definite relation to established physical constants. To this end a new method of determining the hydrothermal equivalent of the bomb calorimeter has been devised; the influence of impurities in the oxygen used, as well as of some other minor sources of error, has been studied; and a redetermination of the heat of combustion of benzoic acid has been made with reference to its acceptance as a standard substance in bomb calorimetry. It is believed that the results of these investigations will be of interest and value to all experimenters who use the bomb calorimeter for any purpose.
